

In the interest of the spirit of the internet, it is of great importance that net neutrality be preserved. Under the Obama administration, there were threats to net neutrality, and there were statutes put in place to prevent those threats from allowing the free internet to be filtered, skewed, or further exploited by ISPs. Now, under the Trump administration, there seems to be a very real chance that net neutrality will be compromised, and that internet throttling will become legally available to ISPs for preferential treatment toward ISP-favored businesses and, more terrifyingly, information sources that suit ISP interests.

Do not allow this to happen. Preserve net neutrality at all costs, or I will personally raise hell, attend protests, and spread pro-net-neutrality sentiment wherever I go. The ISPs cannot be allowed this kind of terrifying control over something that should be a level playing field in everyone's best interests.